How did hockey reflect politics in this conflict?

During WWII, USA and Soviet Union set aside their differences to fight a common enemy.

American and Soviet soldiers embrace each other at the Elbe River in Germany in April, 1945. The meeting of the two armies symbolized the end of WWII in Europe.

Hitler and Fascist Germany

Chapter Issue: To what extent can ideological conflict influence international relations

However, after the war they began competing against one another trying to show the other the benefits of their ideology with often scary results.

In 1927, Stalin predicted the following:

“...there will emerge two centres of world significance: a socialist centre, drawing to itself the countries that will incline towards socialism, and a capitalist centre, drawing to itself the countries that incline towards capitalism. Battle between these two centres for command of the world economy will decide the fate of capitalism and of communism in the entire world.”

Liberal democracy and communism

End of World War II: Agreements and Ideologies

- Russia, The United States and France often discussed what Europe would be like after the defeat of Nazi Germany
- It was clear, even during the war that Britain and The US had much different visions for Europe than did Russia

End of World War II: Agreements and Ideologies

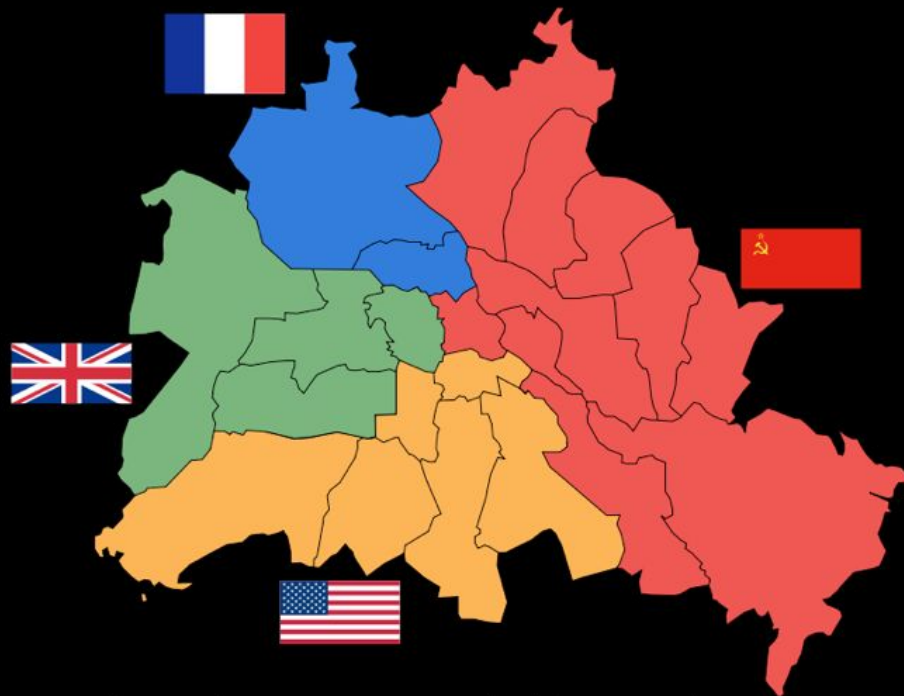

- In 1945 the Big Three countries (US, UK, USSR) met in Yalta Ukraine to discuss the redrawing of the map of Europe after the imminent defeat of Germany and Japan, this would be known as the Yalta Conference

Agreements in the Yalta Conference included:

Dividing Germany into 4 zones of occupation

Remember this one for later...

AND Having free elections in newly liberated countries of Europe.

Countries throughout Europe faced an uncertain future...
Political, economic and social systems were in chaos.
Leadership of “Big Three” met again at Potsdam,
Germany in the summer of 1945.

Western Allies had experienced big changes since Yalta.

FDR had died
Harry S. Truman new president

Churchill lost the general election

Clement Attlee new
Prime Minister

Both Truman and Attlee openly anti-communist before coming to power...

America had finished work on the A bomb

Stalin established communist-friendly governments in territories liberated by USSR Red Army in 1945.

He did not want to give up these territories.

The Potsdam Conference

- Confirmed the division of Germany and Austria into 4 zones of occupation
- Limited industrialization of Germany, no militarization
- Soviets would enter in war against Japan
- $20 Billion in payments from Germany to the Allies
- Free elections would be held in Poland -- This one is important!

End of World War II: Agreements and Ideologies

- The Potsdam conference is said to be the beginning of the Cold war.

Expansionism

At the end of WWII, USA and USSR began to establish their spheres of influence.

Countries they would influence politically.

Expansionism

Stalin saw expansionism as a way to get “command of the world economy”.

He justified this with specific historical and geographic reasons:

I. Stalin (unlike USA, Britain, and France) wanted to keep Germany divided.

A strong, unified Germany had invaded USSR twice in recent history.

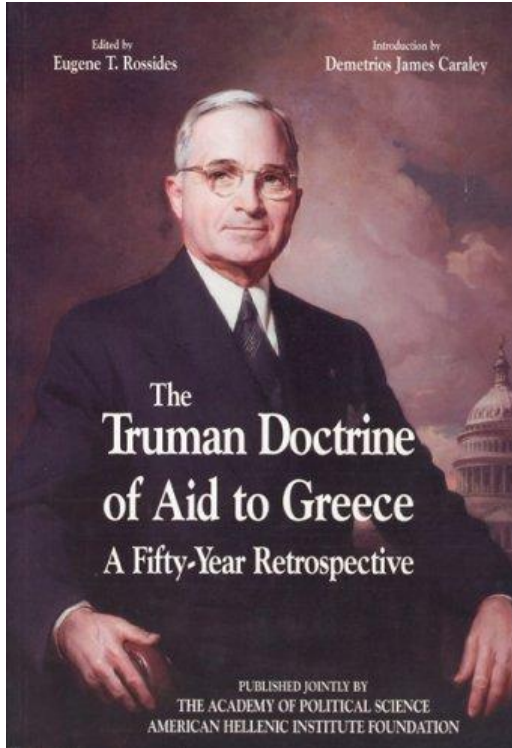

Containment (Pg 190)

- Containment is the idea of slowing or stopping the spread of communism to other nations.
- The United States decided to use containment instead of a “hot war” (Armed conflict) .

Containment (Pg 190)

- The Truman Doctrine was a response to Soviet Military forces in Greece, especially along the northern borders
- The United States felt it was their duty to stick up for new democracies in order for them to choose their own ideological path (stop communism)

Containment (Pg 190)

- The Truman Doctrine (1947)
 - Initially aid anti-communism force in Greece and Turkey
 - $400 Million financial and military aid to fight off communist forces within the countries
 - Expanded to other countries as required

The Marshall Plan (Pg 190)

- The Marshall plan was a $13 billion aid package for countries devastated by the war
- The money could be for any country, democratic or communist

The Marshall Plan (Pg 190)

- Why would the United States offer money to other countries, especially communist countries?

The Marshall Plan (Pg 190)

Dorman Smith in The Phoenix Gazette, N.E.A.
"He's finally getting the hang of it."

- The Marshall Plan did come with some caveats
 - Stabilize inflation
 - Stabilize foreign exchange
 - Limit tariffs and open trade
 - Resist nationalization of industry
 - Essentially become a market economy
- The Soviets and their allies rejected aid from the Marshall plan

The Marshall Plan (Pg 190)

- In 1947 the US invited all countries to come to Paris to discuss the Marshall plan
- Soviets pressured their friends not to attend
- Czechoslovakia was interested in attending
- In response the Russians came up with the Molotov Plan to give aid to Soviet allies

Choosing a side

- During the Cold war many countries felt they needed to choose a side
- Liberal Democracy and an alliance with the US Sphere of Influence (or)
- Communism and the alliance with the Soviets and their sphere of influence

- Countries decided to join the different spheres of influence for many reasons
 - Shared ideological beliefs
 - Military Aid
 - Security
 - Financial Aid

European Countries Deciding

- In the late 1940's Hungary and Czechoslovakia were under Soviet control
- Greece and Turkey were not yet committed to either side

The First Collective Security Agreement

- Britain, Belgium, France, Luxembourg and the Netherlands signed the Brussels treaty.
- The Brussels Treaty is an example of a collective security alliance.

Alliances: NATO and the Warsaw Pact

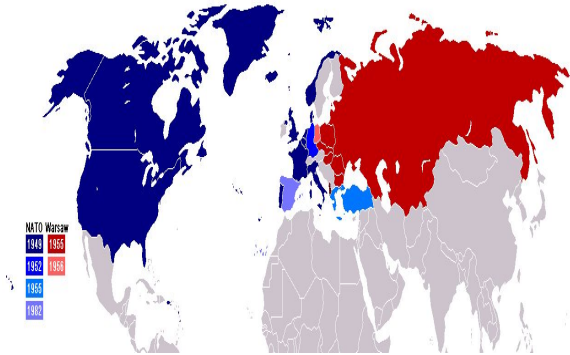

Collective security a military alliance for mutual protection against the threat of an enemy attack.

NATO and the Warsaw Pact (Pg 191)

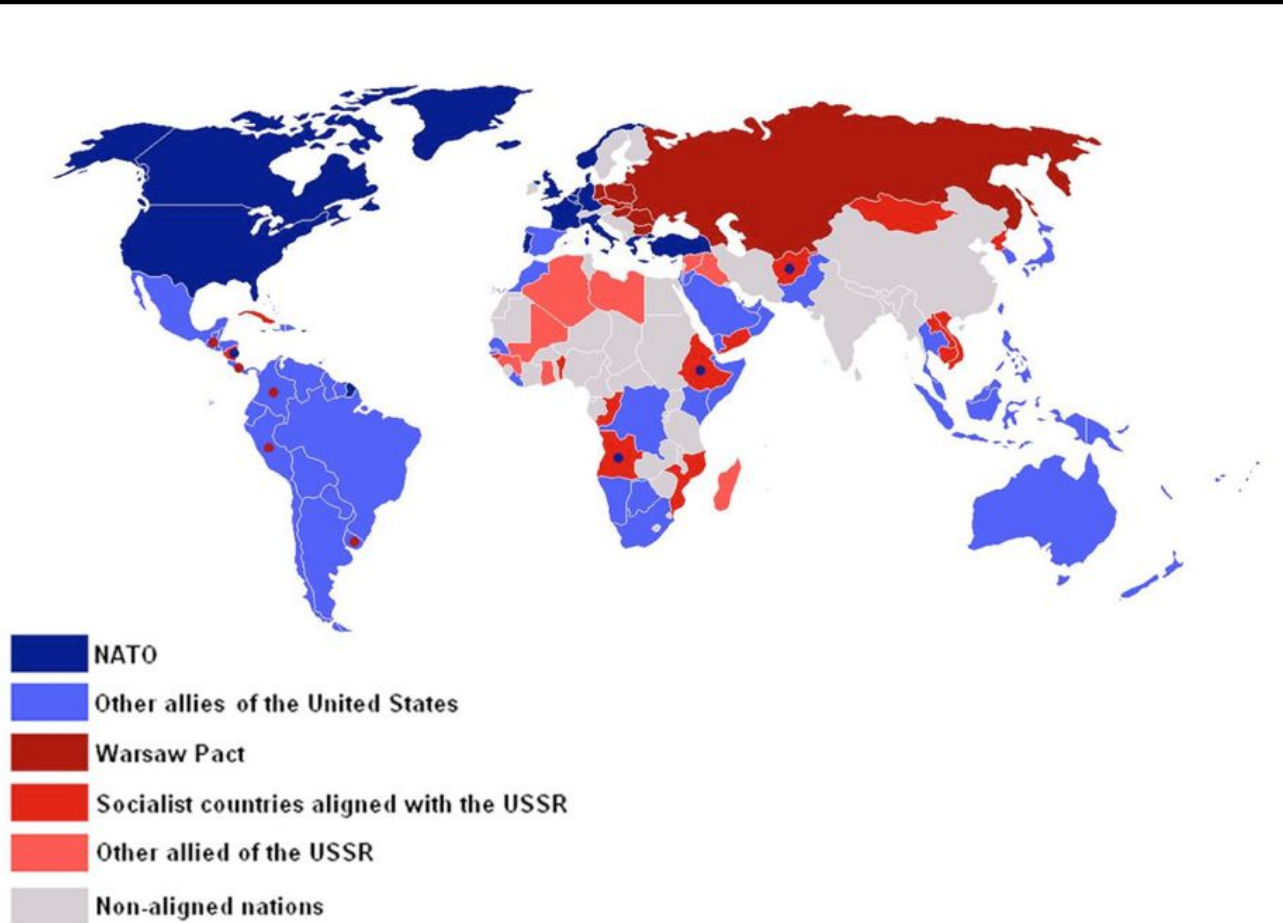

- In 1949 the United States joined what would become the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO)
- NATO was a collective security agreement to protect members from Soviet aggression.
- Most countries in Western Europe along with The US and Canada were members

NATO and the Warsaw Pact (Pg 191)

- In response to the Marshall Plan and NATO, the Soviet sphere of influence created the Warsaw Pact
- The pinnacle to the Warsaw Pact was the joining of NATO by West Germany
- A militarized West Germany was seen as a threat to The Soviet Union and Eastern Bloc countries

Alliances: NATO and the Warsaw Pact

Summary of Competing Ideologies

- Ideological conflict can lead to disagreement and clashes.
- Post war relations between the US, Britain and The USSR were defined by the Yalta and Potsdam conferences.
- These conferences made it clear that there were two superpowers in the world that saw things very differently from each other

Summary of Competing Ideologies

- The Soviet Union tried to expand its sphere of influence to protect themselves from invasion from Germany and to increase their economic power in the world
- The United States adopted a strategy of containment to slow the spread of communism and increase their sphere of influence (Marshall Plan and Truman Doctrine)
- Many countries felt they needed to choose sides for one reason or another
