5. What problems did Russia face in the late 1800s and early 1900s?

Bloody Sunday:

- ☐ In a 1905 march the workers led by Father Gapon. Previously Gapon had been part of a program known as police socialism which meant the police allowed protest activity to be led by hand picked moderates so that the workers could "blow off steam" without causing real trouble. When this program ended Father Gapon had formed a group known as the Assembly of Russian Workers.
- ☐ 1904 was a tough year for workers. Real wages of workers had declined by 20% in 1904. When the Putilov Iron Works fired four members of the Assembly of Russian Workers Gapon called for action. In January of 1905 Father Gapon led 110, 000 workers on the Winter Palace in St. Petersburg. The Tsar was not even at the Palace. He and his wife were 20 miles outside of St. Petersburg at the Czar's Village (Tsarskoe Cello) off attending to their sick son.
- ☐ Watch the film:

6. What happens as the crowd approaches the Winter Palace?

7. Before Bloody Sunday many Russians looked on the Tsar as their father. How do you think the events of Bloody Sunday Changed this?

- In the aftermath of Bloody Sunday there were widespread labour unrest in the country. Strikes, protests and much violence. In October the St. Petersburg Soviet was formed. The word Soviet means council. This council was to coordinate strikes. Although this organization was not very important in 1905 it became very important in 1917.
 - The First Russian Constitution: The Tsar was granted an assembly of the people's representatives (Duma) and he signed the October Manifesto which granted a constitution that gave Russian people basic civil rights such as Freedom of Speech. The formation of political parties was also made legal.
