Chapter issue:

To what extent are socialism and Marxism responses to classical liberalism?

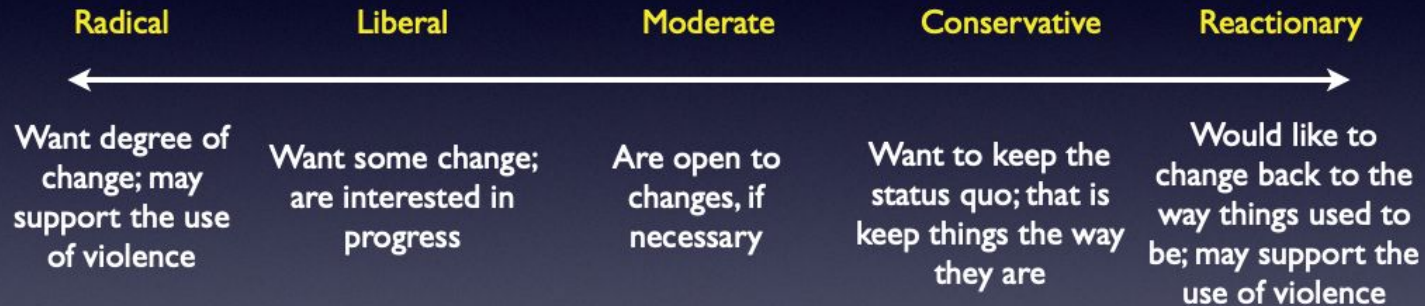

What do you know already about socialism/Marxism?

There's an evenin' haze settlin' over the town
Starlight by the edge of the creek
The buyin' power of the proletariat's gone down
Money's gettin' shallow and weak
The place I love best is a sweet memory
It's a new path that we trod
They say low wages are a reality
If we want to compete abroad

Meet me at the bottom, don't lag behind
Bring me my boots and shoes
You can hang back or fight your best on the front line
Sing a little bit of these workingman's blues

-Bob Dylan "Workingman's Blues #2"

Social Issues/The Desire for Change

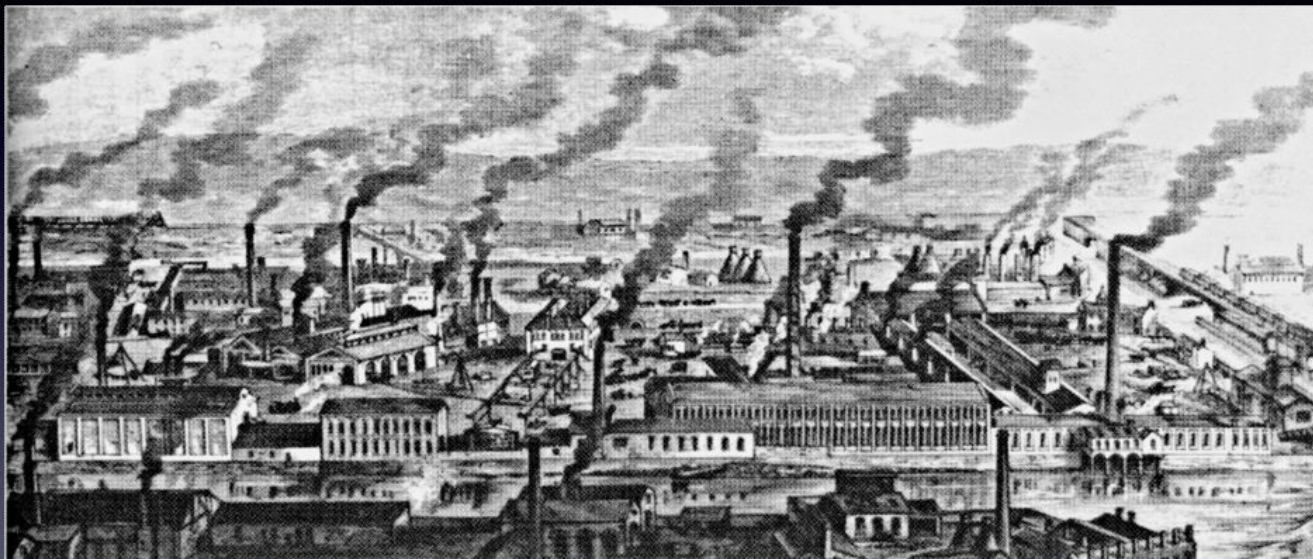

Where on this spectrum would you place yourself in terms of actions you would take in response to this situation?

What actions might a radical take?

A moderate?

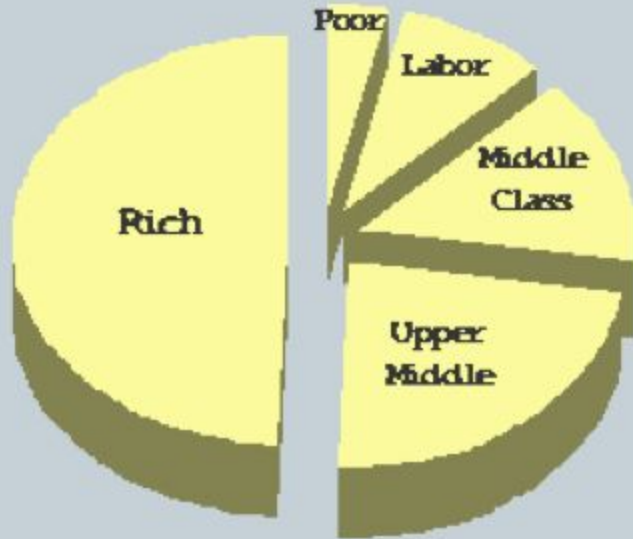

A reactionary?

The Industrial Revolution (1700s-1800s)

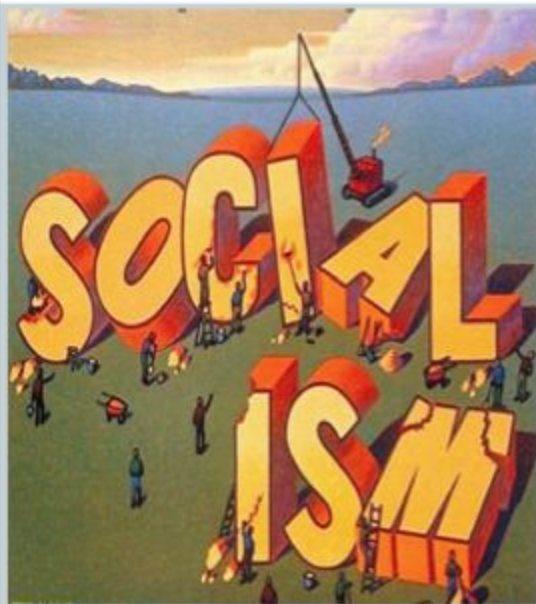

Importance was placed on the individual and the ability to act freely.

The Origins of Socialism (Pg 142)

- As a response to the increasing income gap and unfair distribution of wealth in society, there was a movement to modern liberalism

The Origins of Socialism (Pg 143)

- The movement to modern liberalism created the socialist movement
- However, not all socialists believed the same things and often did not agree on the best way to do things, even among themselves

Collectivism (1800s)

Importance shifted to:

Collective responsibility

Collective interests

Co-operation

Economic equality

Collective norms

Public property

With a partner, provide a working definition of each of these principles

Robert Owen

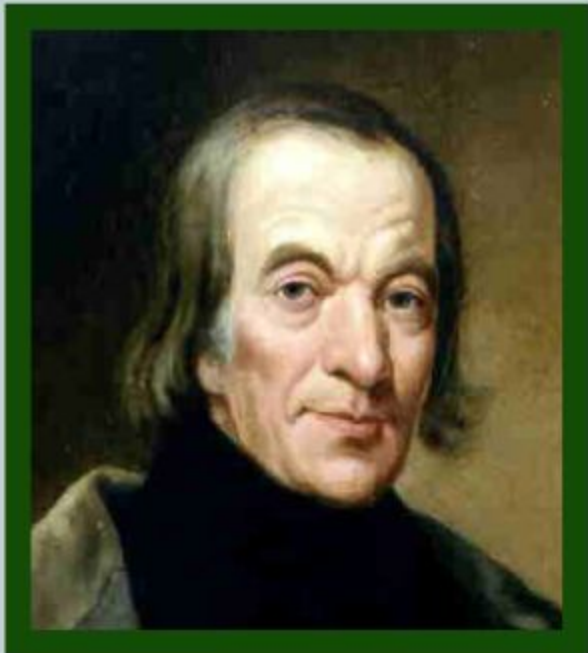

The birthplace of socialism

Eight hours' daily labour is enough for any human being, and under proper arrangements sufficient to afford an ample supply of food, raiment (clothing) and shelter, or the necessities and comforts of life, and for the remainder of his time, every person is entitled to education, recreation and sleep.

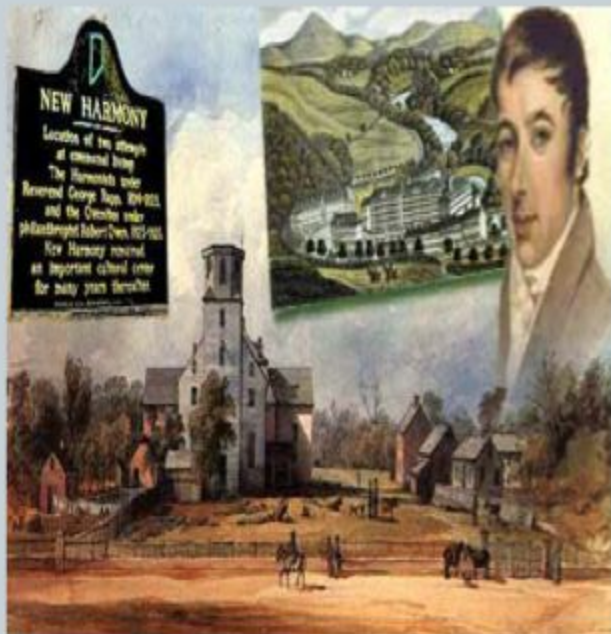

-Robert Owen

Socialist Values and Early Socialism (Pg 143)

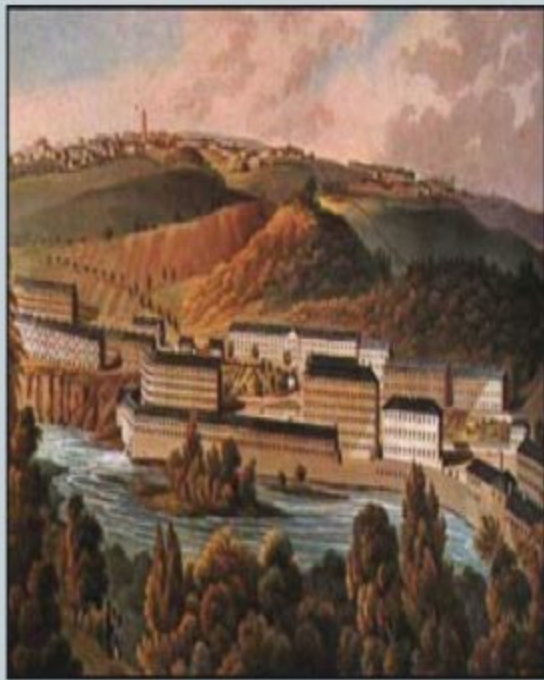

- Robert Owen was a factory owner in Scotland (1771 – 1858)
- He was one of the first factory owners that believed that workers should be treated well
- He offered schooling for children and adults, provided health care, and gave the workers a voice in his businesses

Socialist Values and Early Socialism (Pg 143)

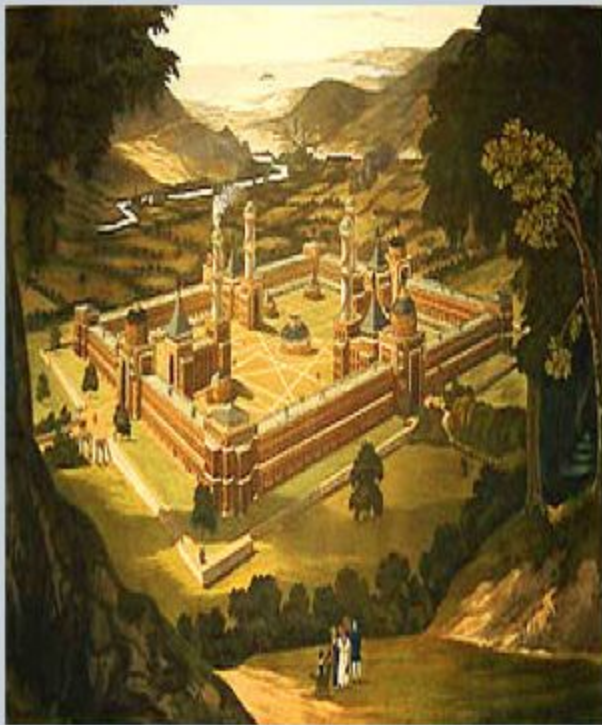

- Owen believed that the business owners had a responsibility to take care of the workers
- Without the workers there would be not products or services to sell

Socialist Values and Early Socialism (Pg 143)

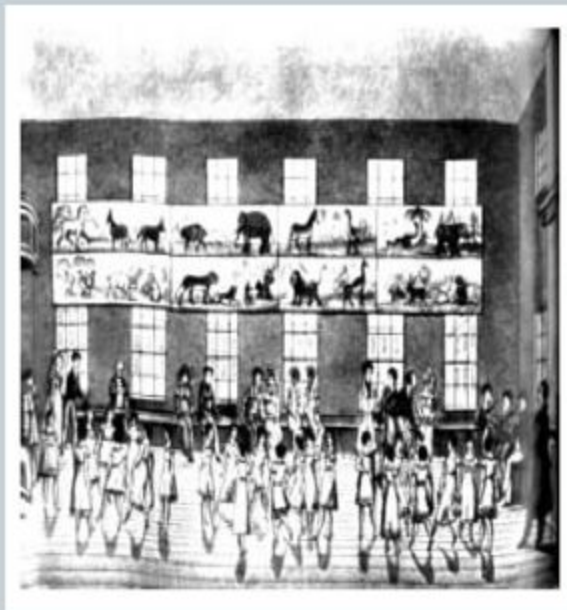

- In his textile mills he raised wages, lowered hours and did not hire children under 10 years of age
- He was able to do all of this and make profits as well

Socialist Values and Early Socialism (Pg 143)

- Owen believed that if all business owner embraced these socialism values they would be able to strike the perfect balance between economic, physical, social and emotional needs for all

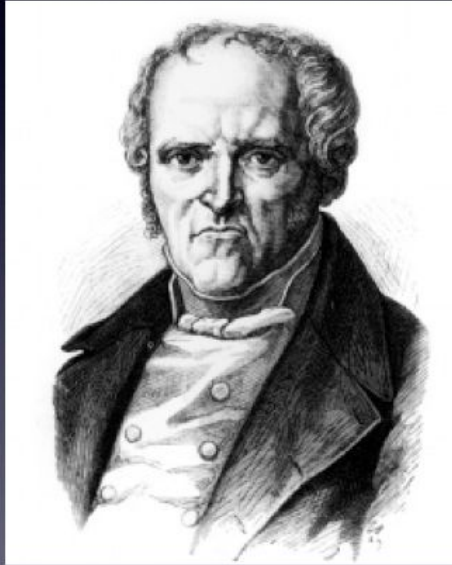

Socialist Values and Early Socialism (Pg 144)

- Owen further believed that education was the key to being able to change society
- If everyone could receive a good education they could create a new system of living in harmony and cooperation

Charles Fourier (1772-1837)

Believed that a utopia, or a “perfect place”, could be created where people could prosper and develop to their greatest potential.

Utopian socialist

Charles Fourier (1772-1837)

Believed that real benefits would come from arranging people in small, self-sustaining communities.

Charles Fourier (Pg 144)

- Owen and Fourier tried to start utopian communities where they lived.
- These ideas quickly spread to the United States and similar groups tried to create these “perfect places” or utopian societies

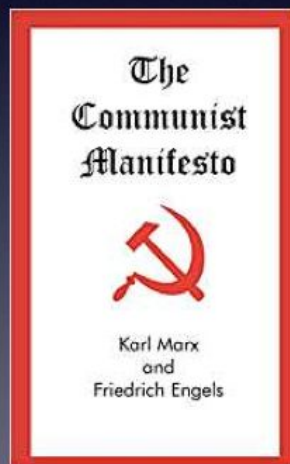

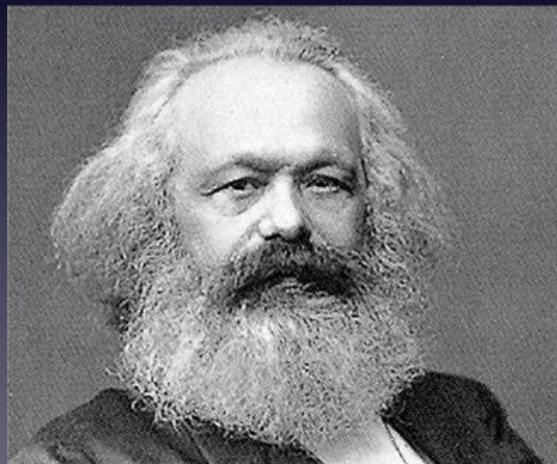

Karl Marx (1818-1883)

One of the most significant socialist thinkers.

Inspired socialist movements around the world.

Wrote about the failings of capitalism and its negative effects on the working class.

Wrote The Communist Manifesto (1848)

Marxism: a socialist ideology that evolved from Marx's ideas.

Principles of The Communist Manifesto

The struggle between the proletariat (workers) and the bourgeoisie (business owners) is the most important force in society.

The proletariat are oppressed under a capitalist free-market system.

Principles of The Communist Manifesto

His proposed solution: seize control from the bourgeoisie through a revolution and take control of the political, economic and social systems.

A socialist society

No class differences

All people share in the production of goods and wealth

A classless society in which all people share in the production of goods and no government is needed.

Karl Marx (Pg 145)

- Once the revolution was complete there would be a move to a classless society
- In this society all of the means of production and profits would be shared by all and there would be a perfect collective society

Principles of The Communist Manifesto

Collective values & public property for the benefit of all people

Believed that through revolution, we move closer to a society that he called communism.

According to Marx, a socialist society formed by the workers should involve such things as the following:

- The shift from private property to public property
- The creation of new factories controlled and owned by the government
- Government control of all banking through a national bank
- Government control of the means of transportation and communication
- Free education for all children in public schools

Socialism as a Response to Classical Liberalism

Socialists suggested that social and economic inequalities could be addressed by encouraging more government intervention in the economy.

Wealth more evenly distributed to all

Embraced collectivism

What insight does this chart give you into why socialism developed?

Values of Socialism (Collectivism)	Values of Classical Liberalism (Individualism)
Collective interests: Humans should be co-operative, helpful and compassionate.	Self-interest: Individuals should act in their own self-interest.
Collective responsibility: Society, through government, should be responsible for the well-being of its members.	Individual rights/responsibilities/freedoms: Individuals should be responsible for their own well-being.
Economic equality: Government should intervene in the economy to ensure a more equitable distribution of wealth among citizens in society.	Economic freedom: The economy should be determined by market forces, such as supply and demand. The government should not intervene.
Public property: The government should own major industries and run them on behalf of the people.	Private Property: Individuals should have the right to own, buy, or sell property.
Co-operation: People should co-operate to achieve collective goals.	Competition: Competition benefits society when people work in their own self-interest, leading to innovation, motivation and lower prices.
Adherence to collective norms: People should follow rules and norms that benefit society.	Rule of Law: No one is above the law, and each individual is accountable to the law.

What do Marxism and democratic socialism have in common?

They both believe in a classless society.

They both believe in all people sharing fairly in the wealth of the country.

Where do Marxists and Social Democrats differ?

Their approach to change.

How do you think these two would differ in their approaches to change?

Where do Marxists and Social Democrats differ?

They hoped to change things through democratic political processes.

Early Social Democrats believed that political, economic, and social change could be achieved without revolution.

Such as what?

Elections and reform

By the early 20th century, democratic socialists began to organize political parties in Western Europe and North America.

They wanted to create a society that had the best of both worlds of socialism and liberalism.

Examples of Democratic Socialism in Canada

7. Read page 149. Below is a list of beliefs that most democratic socialists would agree with. Some are socialist beliefs ("S") and some are classical liberal beliefs ("L"). Place an S or an L in front of each belief to indicate if it is liberal or socialist

_____ Men are born free and have certain rights, such as the right to life, liberty and happiness.

_____ There should be greater economic equality in society

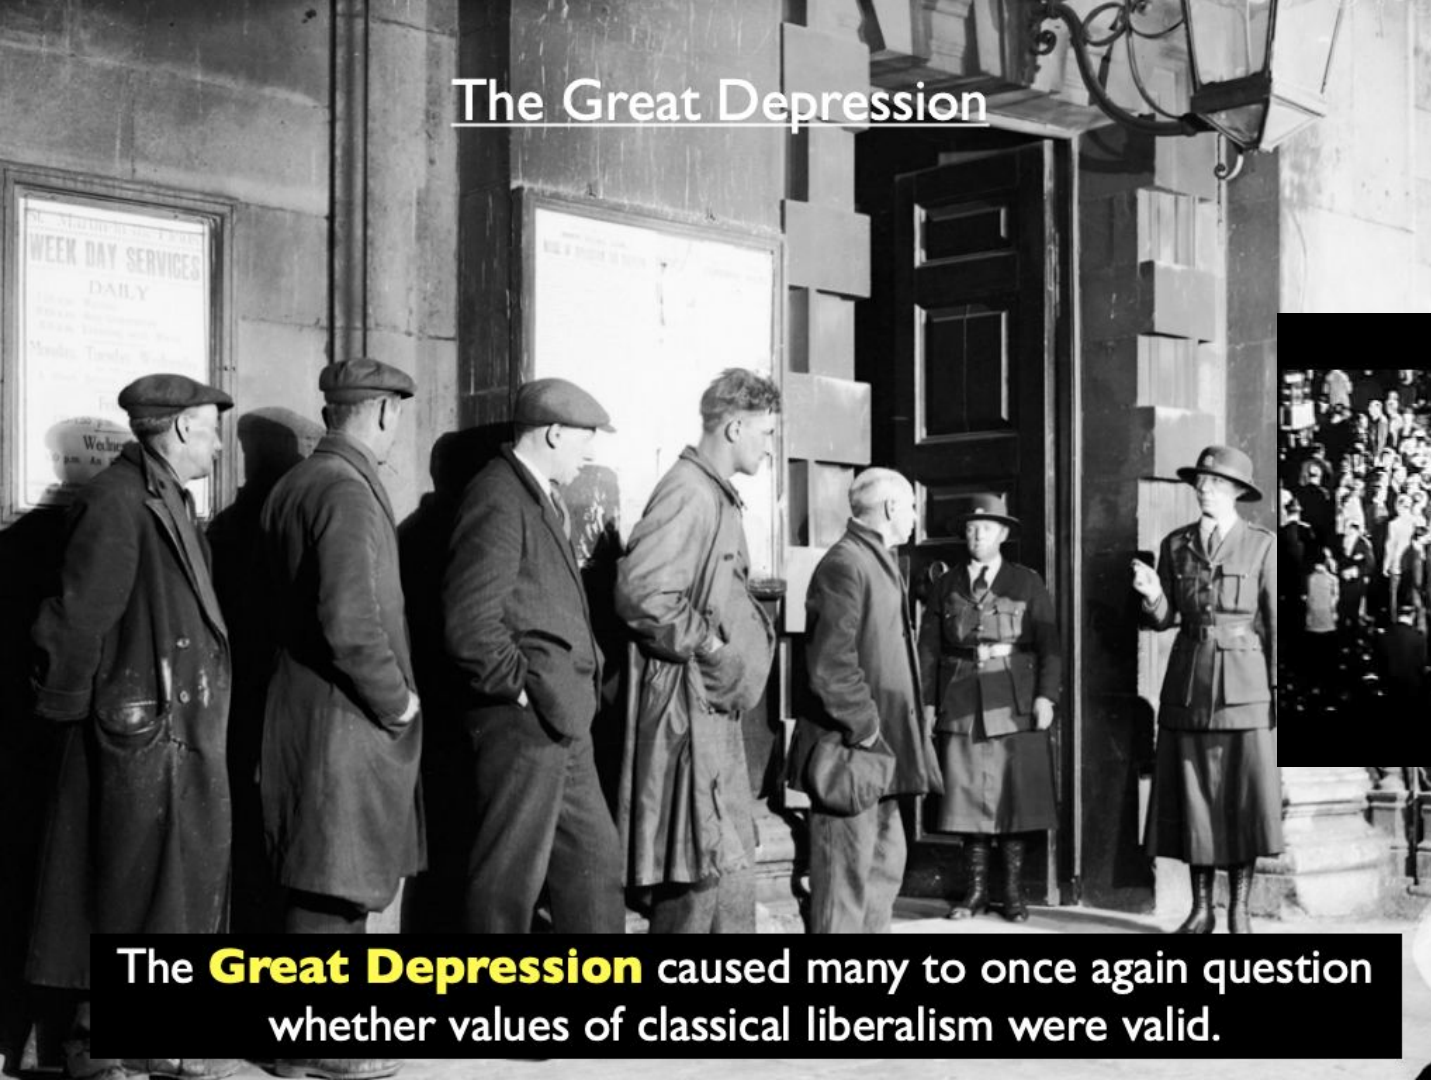

_____ Capitalism infringes on workers rights and prevents them from being free

_____ Government should be based on the will of the majority

_____ Government should protect the right of workers to be in a union and bargain collectively

_____ Society should be based on the Rule of Law.

The Great Depression

The Great Depression caused many to once again question whether values of classical liberalism were valid.

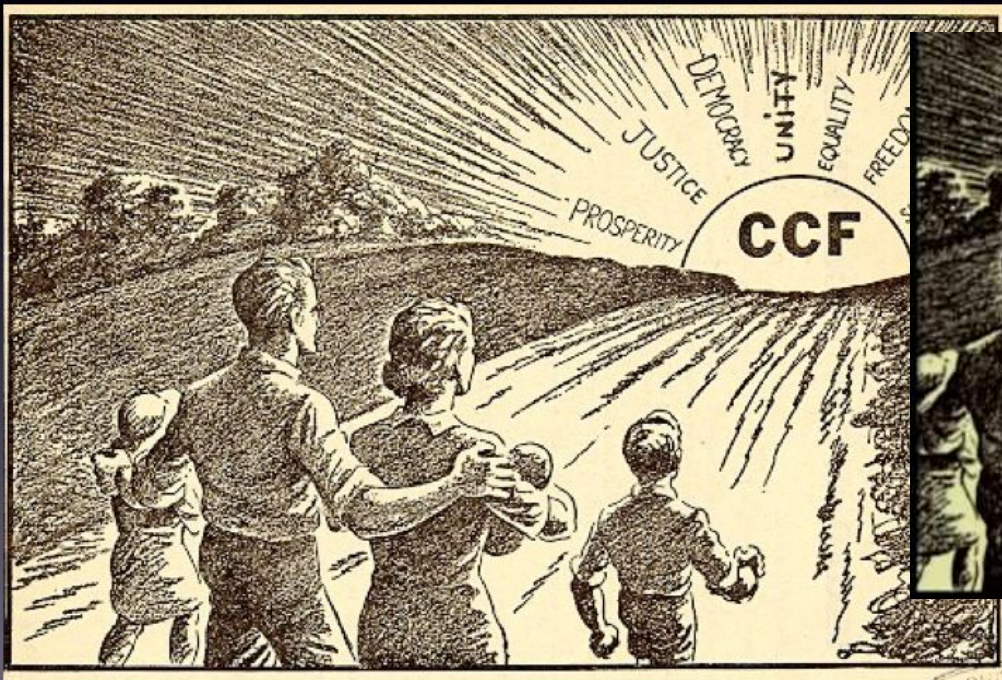

Many historians and economists, regardless of their political orientation - conservative, liberal, or socialist - agree that the stock market crash and the Great Depression were the result of an unregulated economy.

As economic standstill and mass unemployment rose dramatically in Canada, more and more Canadians began to believe that their government needed to do more to support them.

Formation of the Co-operation Commonwealth Federation

The CCF

The effects of the Great Depression were particularly harsh in the Prairies.
The CCF was founded in Calgary in 1932.

The CCF wrote the Regina Manifesto in 1933

It outlined the following goals:

Job creation programs

Shelters for the jobless and homeless

Pension programs

Subsidized health services

The Rise of Socialism in Québec and the Parti Québécois

In the 1960s, Québec saw a rise in socialism, linked closely to a growing movement supporting the sovereignty of Québec.

The Groupe révolutionnaire marxiste (Revolutionary Marxist Group) promoted the struggle for an independent Québec led by the working class.

To groups like this, the Canadian government represented an oppressive force, much like business owners of laissez-faire capitalism.

Liberal Party - Premier Jean Lesage (1960-66)

Socialist values

Nationalized hydroelectricity

Introduced family allowances

Greater access to health care

Greater access to education

Created a welfare state

Parti Québécois - Premier René Levesque (1976-85)

Founder of the Parti Québécois

While the main goal of the PQ was achieving Québec independence, it also embraced socialist values.

Generous parental leave program
$7/day universal child care program
Pharmacare (prescription drugs)

...le degré réel de civilisation nous est indiqué aussi par le traitement qu'on accorde à la multitude inorganisé et d'ordinaire silencieuse des gens les plus faibles et démunis: les vieillards, les enfants sans défense, les handicapés, les familles nombreuses à revenus modestes.

...the real degree of civilization is also indicated to us by the treatment shown to the unorganized and usually silent multitude of the weakest and most disadvantaged people: the elderly, defenseless children, the handicapped, families with many children on a modest income.

-René Levesque (1970)
